But More Than Manner Assures Their Resolve

Communiques released in Messow and London yesterday following Churchill's return from a four-day trip to Moscow took pains to cay that not only were existing understandings reaffirmed but in an atmosphere of "shoretity and cordiality." This reassuring note was intended, we may be positive, not for the Moscow end of the line, which has long crawed the reassurance of action instead of words, but for all those in England and the United Brates who have worred lets Russia, left pretty much on her non against the Nats, be plotting an independent peans.
