Conscription

It Hasn't Much Chance To Get By Congress

President Roosevelt's desire to bring the war home to America by means of a universal service act seems likely candidates for failure. Congress, expressing a very small minority, took a quick stand against conscription of all U. S. labor, and pressure from outside Congress is certain to develop against the plan.

Which?

Is There a Choice: Johnston or Smith?

If it comes to pass that Governor Olin Johnston enters the Senatorial race against Cotton Ed Smith, as expected, the State of South Carolina will be faced by the horns of a dilemma as painful as any in memory. Almost perennially unfortunate in her Governors, and often equally so in her Senators, the State of South Carolina is presented with a choice of lesser disqualifications.

He told me how as a young man when he took his first job away from home in the business world he lived with a woman who was a Christian. He had been reared to attend Church and Sunday School, but like many young men when they leave home, he had an idea that he might take a vacation from such things.

What are we talking about, anyhow? The policy of war against Russia is Hitler's policy. The very same hunch occurred to Der Fuhrer three years ago, with only that he had the record. How did we come out here?

My purpose, so far, has been to try to solve the Polish-Russian quarrel, but to show that the more frantic of current solutions merely take us into intricate labyrinths, and leave us in the strangest places, with our hats flying in the air.

We must hope for no short routes to victory, nor must we whitely away our demand for unconditional surrender.
