Beyond Victory

After four days of anxious walling, the news of Japan's final capitulation brought only joy that the guins were silent at last. Americans had begun to look upon the peace necotiations with suspicion, and to surmise that this was the last incredible trick of the most treacherous enemy we have evir faced. The country, we suspect, knew the beginning of grave doubts about this Emperor business; it wanted a clean, quick end to a war that had draged to a terrible conclusion. The nation, its heast with the men who were still on the fighting line, and with those who were hasteing there, was properly grateful.

And yet how short the months have been since military and positical leaders were rejoicing that, this time, we

Japan, in her last moments, had face to save, and she did so in a ritual which is incomprehensible to Americans. And in saving face she openly—and prema-turely—did what filter's party did for Germany in the preparation of the people with blame for defeated of the people with blame for defeat. The velocity was complete and beyond comprenies, but in the midst of it the enemy set the stage for a potential swent demands of the people with blame for defeat. The velocity was complete and beyond comprenies, but in the midst of it the enemy set the stage for a potential second effort at world domination.

it the enemy set the stage for a potential second cfort at world domination. We may dismiss the power of the Emperor and the cvil influence which he wields over his supine subjects, so long as the animatian complete control in dapan. So long as the enemy is limited to his home fisheds, so long as the enemy is limited to his home fisheds, so long as his political and industrial activity is sharply censored, we have nothing to fear from Japan. But in the name of the many thousands who died from Pearl Rarbor to Hiroshima, and in the name of many, many more Americans to come, we cannot afford forgetfulness of the evil spirit of Japan even in the moment of victory. There can be no forgetting that Japan was able to quit the war she made at a far more proplitious moment than Germany chosy repentance, or considers.

There is little reason to believe that German's know repentance, or consideration of the second defected, there is less reason to believe these things of Japan. We will appropriately celebrate in the days to come the victories won with so much blood in aintood five years of trial. We will celebrate then even more appropriately in the years ahead only if we continue to impose upon the Japanese people the same rised rule which General MarArthur will shortly inaugurate.

General MacArthur will shortly inamourate.

The day and the deed called for Winston Churchill.

To the people of the United States mothing would seem more expressive, or more appropriate to this longed-for hour, than to be addressed in valedictory by the Hon. Winston Churchill, M. P. Rightfully reserving the place of first honor on any program for their own President, there would remain a spot which only Churchill could fill. Comrade of four years of fighting shoulder to shoulder, was leader whose indomitable will and fortitude were the standard around which his own and other poppies railied in their darked mour creation with Roosevelt of the Atlantic Charter, co-lounder of the United Nations, a principal force in the formulation of the Charter by which the world sariver to secure its hardwon peace, this Englishman has helped to shape the destiny of our own country along with his.

The people of the United States, we know, would deem it on more than is due to high regard in which they hold him if he would address them in this hour of sweet triumph. They disk to hear what Winner has to say, and the way he says it.
