NEW YORK--These are days when the United Nations is on trial for its life. Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin's recent proposal for a western union of European nations would set up a new world organization separate and apart from the United Nations. There are many who wonder whether or not such a union of western powers will mean the eventual end of the UN--the cutoff point between two worlds.

On May 15th, two months away, British troops will leave Palestine. The Arab nations of the Middle East have promised war for a western union of European nations would set up a new world organization separate and apart from the United Nations.

Table with 4 columns: Statement, January 1947, December 1947, Per cent. Rows include 'America should give up trying to build any kind of international organization...' and 'America should continue to count on the United Nations organization...'.

The public statements of some leaders have indicated a growing lack of faith in the UN. The people, on the other hand, perhaps because of their ingrained faith in the United Nations, are more inclined to doubt the need for world government.

The strong tide of feeling in favor of the United Nations sweeps across every region of the land. Residents of the East Coast are most international minded. Those who live in the Southwest are more inclined to doubt the need for world government.
