FACT OR FANTASY?

CONSIDERING the number of persons who feel that war with Russia is inevitable, it is remarkable how little has been done to prepare for the inevitable attack.

tack. History tells us that no nation has ever made adequate defensive preparations for a major war. Perhaps there is no adequate defense against the war that threatens to-day. Perhaps the trempedous destructive power of atomic weapons is what has topit the U. S. from launching a large-scale civilian defense program.

Or, perhaps too many of us believe war is impossible, unthinkable. War unthinkable able? To you, yet. To u. yee. But we arrest the individuals who make war. One group that can make war sits in the Kresilin. It war unthinkable to Stalin and the Polithero?

from safe.

There have been a lot of ideas about defense—decentralization of industry, the comine of a new suburban ane to escase the atomic threat—that sound downricht frantastic when you first hear them. But siter you think them over they simmer down to sanity. Some solid cilizans have been talking about them.

This week the sober U. S. Ness & World Report revealed that not only Gen. Kenney but the National Security Resources Board is more than mildly concerned about atomic defense.

Says the weekly magazine:

The NSRB is also concerned with de-centralization of factories and construc-tion of protective structures for individuals in their own neighborhoods.
