THE ARMY'S INTELLIGENCE TEST

THE director of Selectives Service in ... North Carolina is upset about the number of Tar Heel men failing the Armys intelligence text. He thinks that a failure rate of about one out of three is "a diagrace to the state".

That's bad, of course. The state doesn't like to be disgraced in anything. A diagraced level of intelligence would be unpleasant, indeed.

graceful levsi of intelligence would be unpleasant, indeed.

But in a series of three acticles this week, News staff writer Tom Fesperman suggested that we might not be quite as bad off above the shoulders as a quick judgment on the intelligence test matter ould lead you to believe. Mr. Fesperman suggests the Army is now
