The 3rd Man Theme

The following is a partial transcript of the discussion between Joseph N. Welch, Army counsel, and Roy Cohn, McCarthy's assistant during the Army-McCarthy hearings.

WELCH: You have referred to that picture as showing Mr. Secretary Stevens smiling at Dave Schine . . . It is a grim smile on Stevens' face.
COHN: I fully accept what you say. To me it is a picture of Secretary Stevens. If it is a grim smile, so be it. It is a picture of Private Schine . . . They are looking at each other.
WELCH: Mr. Stevens is looking to his right, isn't he?
COHN: I would say he probably is looking to his right, and Private Schine is standing in his right.
WELCH: On Mr. Stevens' right are two figures?
COHN: Yes.
WELCH: One is Private Schine?
COHN: Yes.
WELCH: And further to Mr. Stevens' right is Colonel Bradley?
COHN: Standing sideways.
WELCH: It would take someone with clairvoyance to know to whom Secretary Stevens is looking, would it not?
COHN: No, I don't think so. It would take somebody with common sense who can look at a picture and see what is in it.
WELCH: I think I observe on Colonel Bradley's face a faint little look of pleasure. Do you, sir?
COHN: Colonel Bradley had a good steak dinner shortly afterwards. Maybe he was anticipating it. Colonel Bradley looks to me as though he, too, is looking at Private Schine.
WELCH: If Mr. Bradley is feeling good about a steak dinner, Schine must be considering a whole haunch of beef.
COHN: Yes, and Mr. Stevens, the grimness on his face might have come after Senator McCarthy told him that hearings showing what was going on in Communist infiltration in the Army would begin the next Tuesday.
