We had hoped that after the mess as and France made of things at Versatiles, Britain would have learned her lesson about pledges when she promised during the World War the Arabs and the Jews control of Palestine. Apparently she has not. Unless she is more judicious in her pledges, Britain may be setting the stage for the next war before she has won the present one.

successfully concluded within days—not week.

As usual the Allied forces first tried to win Syria by pollitical propaganda. Their pamphlets and arguments were met by bullets and bombs. If the Allies are still clining to the hope that perhaps the mandate will fall into their hands without much additional military effort, they are gullty of dangerous mistingement.

What does America need to defeat Nazi Germany?

Brigadier General Henry J. Reilly is entitled to guess at this question. In Spain, Chine, and Poland he watched the actual combat of modern armies. During the past winter, he was in Europe as special correspondent for Fortune magazine. He is a West Point graduate, the son of the soldier, the grandson of a sailor. Ever since the World, War he his studied the new forms of, military science.

In the July issue of Fortune General Reilly writes:

To train and maintain the armed forces General Relly outlines, to pro-duce the necessary armament to equip these forces means a national effort that will require greater ascrittees than that will require greater ascritices than most Americans have ever known.
