Draftee Army

We Can't Match Hitler's Army With Selective Service

President Roceveti Indicates that the Government will not attempt to keep selective Service draftees in the army longer than the one-year term specified by Congress.

Accordingly the War Department is preparing to sak for new batches of draftees to replace those who will be returning to civilian life as their terms explore.

expire:
This raises a pertinent question: Is the selective Service Act what we need to build up an effective army yilhin the brief space of time allotted to us by the Grace of God and the Atlantic Ocean.

Letest available figures, reported on the floor of the Senate last Friday, show that the Army is divided into these groups.

as their one-year terms expire, what sort of a standing army are ye point to have on tap? No matter how thick you mix it, we are going to have a group of mijitary units that are continually diluted by, a large proportion of green, untrained men, men who, just as they are beginning to learn what soldering is all about, are to be handed a medal for "defense service" and a ticket home. This copinion is shared by several Requiar Army officers to whom we have talked. These officers were convinced that it takes more than one year to train a modern fighting man; their estimates on the required time range from three to five years. It is estimated that soldiers who operate Hiller's greak war machine, have had an average of four years under arms. Most of them are escaoned battle veleran. The thought that some day we may have to call up our cr-draftee amsteurs to fight this gang of professional campaigners is most unpleasant.

Of course, one year's millitary training sang of professional campaigners is most unpleasant.

Of course, one year's military training is better than none. But it is, obvious into mechanised warfare—both on land and in the air—demands specialization on an unprecedented scale.

A manufacturer who had to hire and rain one third of his personnel every year would have a hard time explaining to his stockholders. It is just as reasonable to expect efficiency from the Army as it would be to expect it from such a manufacturer.

The issue is not whether we must choose between a small, efficient army and a large, relatively inefficient one. The army we need must be both large and efficient. It must be a better army than Hiller's.

and eriment. It must be a better than Hiller's.

It is up to the nation to devise additional methods for building this army; the Sciective Service act is worfully and dangerously inadequate.

OR A POTATO PRESER.

The clerk told Dors an electric rator is O.K. to send her army friend, as it would make no difference if a war is on an AC or a DC basis.
