have talked with several of them. They simply do not understand why a Government that sold itself as a regime dedicated to looking ahead and making plans for the future allowed itself to be caught short at their expense. They wonder what is being planned for their relief. It is one thing to lose your job in time of great husbiness depression, when everybody is up against it. It is something else to be cut off when your friends are enjoying a great wave of prosperity.

We need to consider not only the hundreds of thousands of persons who will be thrown out of work "until defense jobs are available" in the nation's automobile capitals. It is estimated that right here in Charlotte 10,000 persons are dependent upon the automobile industry for income. All of these men will feel the heavy hand of the new restrictions; as many as one-third of them probably will lose their jobs. For example, what excuse will an auto dealern when his company is saying "no" to hundreds of prospective buyers each week because there aren't enough cars to meet the demand?

Many reasons for this lack of enthusiasm—or in some instances downright insubordination — are advanced. We hear that the soldiers were deceived about their terms of service, that there are a large number of second, third, and fourth rate Reserve Orficers in service, that the drafted men

Each fault, real or imaginary, seems to have inspired a corresponding remedy that upon application will restore Army morale to the desired rigor.

Without disqualifying any of the grievances listed above—and certainly not the sincere motives of those who are homestly attempting to improve conditions in the samed forces—we should like to repeat a familiar axiom: Army morale and civilian morale are inseparable; if the morale of the remainder of the nation is firm, only the most un-likely drygmstances could prevent the Army's from being so.

To this statement, let it be added that, according to symptoms within sight of coveryone, the morale of the people of the United States is none too high. Furthermore there are factors now in the

A party of German soldiers in an automobile, apparently in a state of hilarity, came a state of hilarity, came a state of hilarity, came a state of Bergen and down to the water from . But there, instead of hilling or turning, they continued atraight on and plunged to the best of the state of the state

Shortly afterwards the Gestapo rounded up some Norweglans who had witnessed the accident, ques-tioning first of all a stalwart fish-wife on the quay.

"You saw the soldiers coming, "You saw the soldiers coming, didn't you? And you saw they were headed for the water," "Yes," admitted the woman.

Then why didn't you stop them?
