New CCC? Some Kind of Military Training Is Essential

Training Is Essential Congressmen did well to ask the President for more specific comment on his plan for postwar training—military and otherwise"— for American youth. The Congress like most of the country, is currently in favor of some form of compulsory millary training—though Lord tanows how long this sentiment will live when the war is over and easy peacetime ways return.
And the nation was probably a tittle surprised to hear Mr.
Roosevelt speak of other kinds of training for young men.

"Let us make sure that by "Let us make sure that by next Labor Day there will be an end to the wartime re-strictions which have been imposed on labor. These re-strictions, if left in the strictions, if left in the hands of Government, could destroy the institution of a free Americar labor move-ment and totally and the right of collective bargain-ing."

The nation, as Mr. Rossevelt suggested, must give this program considerable thought, for it has been apparent through this war that the one effective means of maintaining prace was plrough preparedness, and military training is part and parcel of any such program and preparedness, and military training is part and parcel of any such program and preparedness, and military training to program and prepared the program of the pro
