Not all of Charlottes dergymen, in an means, exert a wide intractic out the community outside their representations of the community outside their representations but most of those win do become decided assets. And it is all host inevitable that, soon or late, we shall lose these men because of the very rescribing of their leadership in the community.

retience of their leadership in the romminuty.

Dr. G. Ray Jordan of the First Methodist Church is the second such loss among Charlotte's influential religions leaders in recent weeks; Dr. John A. Redhead barely 'preceded him out of the city.

Dr. Jordan found senuine acceptance in the community outside his church. As a minister he has been known for his vigorous, liberal mind and dynamic interpretation of the responsibilities of the Church. In addition he has become sudely read as an author of religious books. He has also become closely identified with civic enterpresse during his five years at First Methodist.

One of the city's foremost and most respected ministers. Dr. Jordan goes to a high position at Emory University in which he will continue to wield a creat his departure, but should find comfort in the First Methodists in their regret at his departure, but should find comfort in the fact that, as professor of homilecters at Emory, he will contribute even more toward Methodism in the section.

'I'm giad you asked mr that," is what the seasoned solon tells the constituent, as he quickly ransacks the mind for a soothing reply in double talk.
