

What America Has To Fear

WHAT in the world has America to fear? The question is posed by the Louisville Courier-Journal which sees evidence on all sides that the American people are in an abnormally jittery state.

It seems clear to the Courier-Journal writer that this fear centers around Russia and its persistent growth of power.

"On the physical side, we are infinitely stronger. Our population is smaller, but our land is unrivaled by any other country.

6, 43 to 6.5. America has the better system of government, the system men choose when they are free to choose.

The plain inference in this piece that we are afraid of Russia, and the Communist designs that to help the democratic cause.

The Russians apparently are convinced that the Red bogey is one of their most potent weapons. It has been used by them for its utmost to inflame the anti-Russian phobias in this country.

As a great democracy, the United States will still feed a pinch in steel, wheat, fertilizer, coal and industrial equipment.

Gambling In The American Way

IMPLEMENTATION of the Marshall Plan for Europe apparently is going to make not a slight difference in the lives of ordinary citizens.

Best guessing in Washington is that the Plan will emerge from the special session with very little attached to it.

It is confidently predicted that there will be no price controls.

Main regulation, which will not be seen or felt directly by the American public, will come in the form of export controls.

National Defense

AS opponents of universal military training try to work out a less drastic method to bolster national defense, UMT supporters are busy.

Speechmaking the drive is The American Legion whose Washington lobbyists are relying on the 3,274,000 Legionnaires to deluge their congressmen.

A little less than one third of UMT supporters are in the House.

General John Thomas Taylor, chief Legion lobbyist, admits the trend is running against them, but insists the House vote will be close either way.

Also working for UMT is the newly-organized National Security Council of 63 veterans, church, educational, and citizens groups.
