T WAB inevitable that the climax of the Atlantic Pact negotiations would prod Russia to new activity in the area where the lension is the greatest—Western Europe. Recent events there are significant in that they indicate that the Kremlin is growing rettless, and may try to regain the initiative in the cold war.

The first reaction to the Pact came a few weeks before its publication when Communist puppets in, various democracles began repeating 'parrol-like the old refrain; If and when war with Russia develops, Communists in all nations will rally to the Party- and fight on its side.

heightened the tension.

1. On Sunday the Allied powers announced that the Soviet currency used in Eastern Germany would be outlawed in the western section. There was an immediate splurge of buying as Western Berliners crossed the border to spend their Russian marks. The Soviets immediately began marging counter measures. 2. REVERSING A TREND

IT ISNT, citizen of the South, that you will wake up one morning and find all the young men gone off to work in the North or West. It isn't that bad, but it's bad enough.

The best qualified, most skilled, most talented men of the South can make more money elsewhere; and they are going after it.

They are going after the money and after jobs and positions where they can work with better equipment, where they can accomplish more, where their work will achieve more recognition, where — you might say — the grass is greener.

It's an old story and we wouldn't bring it up except that things are looking better.

It up except that things are looking better.
Dean J. H. Lampe, of the School of Enjenering at N. C. State College, has brightened the picture considerably with a statement that "the members of our 1404 graduating, class have indicated a strong preference to work in North Carolina industries."

That's half of it. If all graduating classes in all schools in all states in the South had this attitude toward working in the South, the problem would be half-solved.

AVN. G. State, says Dean Lampe, the industries have already indicated their willingness to do their part. "Many North Carolina industries," he said, "have already portion in the problem of the purpose of interviewing seniors for ending the control of the purpose of interviewing seniors for exclusive the south of the purpose of interviewing seniors for exclusive control of the purpose of interviewing seniors for exclusive control of the purpose of interviewing seniors for the purpose of interviewing seniors for the purpose of interviewing seniors for the purpose of the south of the purpose of the south of the south

2. North Carolina's portion of the total cut-back was disproportionately high; 3. Present facilities in North Carolina are inadequate to meet the needs of veterans; 4. Charlotte is the logical location for any new veteran shospital in this state because of its position as a medical center, its good transportation, its housing and recreational facilities. The statistics cited in Washington yesterday proved there is no over-expansion of hospitals in this immediate area, at the situation may be alsewhere. No one wants the Government to throw

A REASONABLE POSITION . hospitals adequately with medical experts and nurses

CHARLOTTES position in the contro-versy over a cut-back in construction of new hospitals for veterans was force-fully presented to a subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee yesterday. The effectiveness of the presentation gives rise to the hope that, the proposed 500-bed 37, 000,050 institution will be put, back on the list.

The local representatives made it quite The local representatives made it quite clear that they are not engaged in a raid on the Treasury. If it can be proved conclusively that the cut-back was, in truth, an economy measure, that the new hospitals are not needed and would be a superfluous, foolish expenditure of public money, then Charlotte will be content to see the hospital project abandoned.

But there is strong evidence that factors ther than economy dictated the decision But there is strong evidence una random other than "conomy dictated the decision to cancel the local project. For instance, the Hoover Commission estimates that there are already thousands of vacancies in veterans hospitals. But it is believed that many of these vacancies result from the Government's inability to staff the
