BARDEN DEFENDS A PRINCIPLE

RP. GRAHAM BANDEN'S firm at MR. Gaginst any Federal aid to private or religious and support the feet in his home district or subject of financial aid to private or religious achools are public in every cliner respect. And conding to Dr. Clyde A. Ewin, State superintendent of public instruction, it will not matter in North Carolina whether the Congress passes the Barden bill, which limits Federal aid to public subject of transportation, textbooks, health, and other "welfare" services. In sitney event of transportation, textbooks, health, and other "welfare" services. In sitney event of public finerest.

Thus Mr. Barden, unlike inmbers of the Congress from other states which permit some aid to private and religious schools, and the subject have been impressive in their sincertity. Under the American way there is room for differences of public instruction, textbooks, health, and other "welfare" services. In sitney event of public finerest.

Thus Mr. Barden, unlike inmbers of the Congress from other states which permit some aid to private and religious schools, is not trying to win votes, or at least avoid losing them, among his constituents back home. He is defending a fundamental doctrine of the American republic—the separation of church and state.

Report of the subject has permit on the constituents back home. He is defending a fundamental doctrine of the American republic—the separation of church and state.

PRESIDENT'S ECONOMIC REPORT

THERE was one disturbing thing in Fresident Truman's otherwise reassuring the proof on the nations economy—his bland assumption that a "temporary" Federal budget deficit is inevitable. Said the President:

"We cannot expect to achieve a budget urplus in a declining national economy."

surplas in a declining national economy."

Yet the great body of his report indi-cated that the decline in production, real earnings, bank deposits and money supply, personal income, consumer spending and the like was relatively small, and that it was partially cushoned by an increase in the rate of saving.

Granted that deficit financing is in-evitable in a time of great national emer-gency, we simply cannot accept the theory and practice in a time of reasonable pros-perity, and we must go shead with plants to reduce Federal expenditures to bring them in line with revenue.

In line with revenue. The his measure was the failure to assess the impact of the military prepared as a failure to assess the impact of the military preparedness and foreign aid group and the failure to assess the impact of the military preparedness and foreign aid group and the second of the properties of the prope

the President's program as recently as January-have hung over the heads of U. 8. businessmen and have served as deterents to new investment and expansion. Freed from the fear of such controls, U. 8. business should be in a better frame of mind for the increased production goals outlined by the Chief Executive.

There was nothing drastic in his other specific proposals for halting the downward trend and starting it back upward. He had made them in one form or another in other messages. We are still to be convinced of the desirability of, for example, the Brannan farm program, the boost in the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour, the extension of the veterans' readjustment; him be president from the proposals make sense; which is the president of the veter of the proposals make sense; (1) lengthening the time limit for RFO loans to business; (2) launching a study of the investment and development needed for our economic expansion; (3) broadening unemployment compensation; (4) pren-

He is right in reminding the Congress that had his pleas for inflationary control legislation been adopted at the end of the war, we would be spared some of the evil effects of that inflation today, And we can hope that his three-man advisory commission was equally right in its reassuring statement that:

"We may have the unique and fortunate experience of legislating a major inflation without falling into a severe recession."

TITS too bad that the jury trying Algar Hilss for perjury didn't come to an agreement one way or snother, for it appears that we are going to be burdened with a dull restatement of the whole lusteriess association between Hiss and Chambers many years ago.

If Hiss were on trial for espionage, it would be another matter. We would welcome, and turge, a new trial in the flopes that he would either be cleared once and for all or convicted. The statute of limitations forbids the espionage or treason charge, and the only thing at issue in the recent hearing was whether or not Hiss committed perjury when he appeared before a Federal grand jury last year. It was the word of Whittaker Chambers, it was the word of Whittaker Chambers, and the way slope some point on the spipe or charge and the only thing at issue in the recent hearing was whether or not Hiss committed perjury when he appeared before a Federal grand jury last year.

There is no getting around the fact that someone surned over to Whittabler Chambers copied of secret Ooverment documents. If the first trial had given any real proof, of it should reflect the proof, of it should be expected proof, of it should reflect the contract of the case way he got those documents would be more sympathetic to another hearing in the hope that such practices could be avoided in the future.

Dan Nichols was in the office yesterday compilating about the Vandals which are doing such damage in some sections of the town. Someone got into his apple orchard Bunday and stole exactly four-fifths of his apple crop, he said. He had five apples on a tree, and four of them were stolen. He said he was going to report the matter to the police "and raise more racket than the alligator did when the pond went dry." — Carlsbad (N. M.) Current-Argus.

According to an Olney reader, the tradi-tional Rebel yell was, "Yip, Yip, You-all." I heard it only once and that was at a Confederate celebration of some kind about 45 years ago, and it didn't sound anything like it. In conclusion I will say that I am deeply grateful to the Duke Power Co. for creating this nice nearby resort which I know is enjoyed by many.
