Teen-Age Mail Fifteen Is Right Age To Start 'Car Dates'

By DOROTHY RICKER

Dear Miss Ricker: I am a girl, almost 14. I have been debating with my parents about how old I should be before I am allowed to have car dates, with a reasonable curfew. The car dating would be only if they had met the boy, knew something of his background and, of course, approved by him.

Most of the boys I go to parties with (their parents do the driving) are age 2 to years older than I. Boys ask me to go on car dates with them (on the rare occasions when they get the car) but I have to say "No" or make excuses because my parents think I should be 16 or 17 before I have car dates.

Car Trouble

Dear Car Trouble: I don't think you should have to wait until you are 16 or 17 before you can have "car dates." It seems that most girls are allowed to date in cars when they are about 15. One of the most important things to be sure of is that the boys driving the cars are properly licensed. Also, that they do not drink or drive recklessly. These things are not only important to your parents' peace of mind but for your own safety as well.

or disobey their parents as well.

Dear Miss Ricker: I am a 15-year-old boy. I am not allowed to visit my girl friend or to go anywhere at night. I have to stay home and watch TV every night which my parents think should satisfy me. My girl friend doesn't know why I don't come over and I wonder if I should tell her. Please publish this at the earliest possible date. I'll be watching. Art.

Dear Art: A 15-year-old boy should be allowed to have Friday and Saturday night dates with a reasonable curfew. So, it seems your problem is to persuade your parents to accept the fact.

Unfortunately, it is doubtful that you will have a girl friend very long if your parents will not allow you to go out in the evening. Even if you tell her why you can't see her she will not be satisfied to stay at home, if she is allowed dating privileges.

Perhaps, if you talk this over with Mom and Dad, explain that you can be trusted and are old enough to date, they will relax their control a little and allow you a little more freedom. They should!

A Camping Trip May Not Be The Thing For Mom

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

For a few days now I am thinking of vacations. Who isn't? What is a vacation? Well, it should be a change of pace, a change of scenery, but most of all relief from meeting usual deadlines. "The deadline" is a newspaper term but all people meet deadlines in daily living, and sometimes these are even more wearing than a newspaper deadline.

The man meets it in his business, the woman in her home. Three meals a day must be prepared and the children must be kept on their health giving routines.

WIFE'S VACATION

It's the wise man who realizes his wife's worth and how hard she works. Too rarely, perhaps, the husband will try to plan the yearly vacation around his wife's wishes. All well and good! But often when he thinks he is pleasing his wife—he is really pleasing himself. This is when he proposes a camping trip. "So that mother can get away from household duties."

So, after many years of keeping house and daily household routine and taking care of children, mother is really going to be treated! In many instances this means that mother still will be keeping house, but in a more difficult way. She will be without modern conveniences and the children will be simply wild.

Mother's Helper

Probably your child can open the refrigerator before he can be counted on to pour himself a drink without spilling. On a low shelf, try keeping his own plastic glass of milk or juice—covered with a loose-fitting jar lid. I'll save you steps!
