UNC Presidency: Sense & Nonsense

TAR HEEL editorialists who relegate the University of North Carolina presidency to U. S. education's "minor leagues" are guilty of faulty foresight and faultier hindsight. They argue that, with all the 4alk about deconsolidation to accept the Chapel Hill post. Reason: The relative of the Chapel Hill post Reason: The result of the Consolidated University, once structured the job will diminish in the control of the Consolidated University, once structured the possibility that the University at Chapel Hill will, at some furture date, be part of a larger network of state institutions of higher learning. It is also possible that whoever takes the Consolidated University presidency may some day find himself head of the Chapel Hill division only, while the other units name their own presidents and have their own boards of trustees.

All of this is, of course, crystal ball gaing of the riskiest syst.

But to suggest that the presidency of the University at Chapel Hill would, in any way, be a small job is ridiculous.

It has not been so in the future.

Chapel Hill stood apart—and it is not likely to be so in the future.

Chapel Hill has had a distinguished history. It stands today as one of the great would be highly and the consolidation controversy.

Smoke Where There Was Fire

FIRE destroyed Charlotte's ancient Armory-Auditorium fully 19 menths ago but the Park and Recreation Commission's method of financing a replacement somehow remains a smoldering issue.

The embers first glowed a bit when commissioners announced they would indeed rebuild the gutted recreation facility and call it a "Park Center." There were murmurs of discontent because the city seemed to have its quota of such structures—what with a multimillion dollar Auditorium-Coiseum about 10 open. But this seemed safely solved when commissioners assured the clithenry last March that they would limit the cost of the project to available insurance funds.

By September, however, it was apparent that this was easier said than done. So, commissioners devised a plan: Facilities the insurance money wouldn't the project to surface the content of the project to available insurance funds.

The Art Of Standing On The Brink

THE U. S. was at the brink of war three times during 1953-754, Mr. John Foster Dulles tells the world in the current issue of Lifz magazine. War was averted each time, he said, by warnings that the U. S. was willing to use force, including atomic weapons. The warnings Mr. Dulles lists were as follows:
That the U. S. would renew the Korean fighting, itself if the Communists did not come to terms on a Korean truce.
That the U. S. would destroy with atom bombs Communist staging bases in south China if the Chinese intervened openly in the Indochina fighting.
That the U. S. would defend Formosa as Summing, up his policy in these instances, Mr. Dulles says:

Von have to take chances for peace, Just as you must take chances in war.

Mr. McGinley Stopped That Sliding

O'E of these days, James T. McGinley, postoffice superintendent at Albaquerque, N. M. is going to get what's coming to him. This, we take it, will be a certificate for meritorious conduct and dufful service from some Washington functionary. It will be the kind of thing Mr. McGinley can have framed and hung on his. Ilving room wall, or on the front where he will some day rockvery gently—in retirement.

McGinley deserves it. The other day he found out one of his clerks. Bryon McQuerry, was sliding down a mail chute on his way to work. McGinley gave commands, writing to McQuerry. "It is reported that you are sliding down the mail chute ported that you are sliding down the mail chute on your way to work. This is a mail chute on the way to work.

THE AUTHORS' MOTORS

NOVELS were written before the days of the automobile of course. Field and Jane Austen, Dickens and George Elfot all managed without the motor car. Sometimes one wonders, though, how they did it. Naturally the automobile has a place in modern fiction just as the ydid it. Naturally the automobile has a place in modern fiction just as the electric light and radios and airplanes have their places. But it is interesting to ese how often the motor car ceases to be just a piece of the furnishing and background of a story and becomes a handy and deadly instrument in working it out. The product of the small risk march of Tire Green Har? Instrument of The Green Har? Instrument of The Green Har? Instrument in working it out. The couldn't have really ended the book and herself without the help of the small risk march of Tire Green Well, look years past Arice and the heart of the small risk march of the small risk ma
