Keynote Clement

Selection of Tennessee's Governor Frank G. Clement to be keynote speaker at the approaching Democratic National Convention carries political implications which ramify out into the party, the action which it may take at Chicago and the strategy which is likely to follow in next Fall's campaign.

Georgia Press, Maybe

Addressing the North Carolina Press Association at its annual session at Asheville, Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, voiced sharp criticism of the press for not doing "a good job of presenting and interpreting the segregation controversy."

Fault Lies In White House

Down in Houston, Texas, the other day Senator Sam J. Ervin got in some well deserved links at the weakness of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Governor Clement, who can always hope that a vice-presidential nomination will fall upon him, has been described by observers as "the most persuasive orator to come down the pike since the turn of the century."

Personality aside, the significance of the Clement selection lies in the recognition that, although coming from Senator Kefauver's home state, he is a Stevenson man; that Stevenson supporters are in charge of convention arrangements and machinery that outwardly, though Democrats are aiming at a moderate position, in line with Stevenson's middle-of-the-road philosophy, and that every effort will be made to keep Speaker Ray in the Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson busy and effectively engaged behind the scene...

Walker Lippmann, himself one of those who disavowed faith in the Christian God, acknowledged some years ago that while the whole segregation controversy is charged with emotionalism, against which reason, rationalization and understanding have been used, the whole North Carolina newspaper which came across our exchange desk to the contrary notwithstanding.

State Archives Department asks new building. To keep history dry, or straight? No one can say that the National League All-Stars were without a friend.

Shucks And Nubbins

Looks As If I'll Have To Hedge A Bit. One who beats a typewriter as much as I do cannot help occasionally oversteering himself. Here for years and years I have been bragging on Republican postmasters in this Democratic State of North Carolina only to have the Raleigh post office return letters to Col. John D. Langston of Goldsboro and former Lieut. Reginald L. Harris of Roxboro with notation that the address was "unknown only."

CHAPEL HILL—A North Carolina man who invents things has a novel device of power contained in civic club and political speeches and tried it all into an energy.

WALTER LIPPMAN Today And Tomorrow

The decision, which the President made known to the congressional leaders Tuesday, was taken on the day that the operation had been successful and that they could expect a good and reasonably rapid recovery. The decision taken then was to consider that this second illness was accidental and incidental.

The Question Of Health

On Tuesday, feeling much recovered, the President told the congressional leaders that he had not decided to make a new decision about running again. He faced the issue last week because his illness, which did really raise the question of his fitness. He had not had to face the issue because his illness, which did really raise the question of his fitness, he had not had to face the issue because his illness, which did really raise the question of his fitness...
