 also was a Communist deputy in the state parliament of North Rhine Westphalia. In the early 1950s he broke with the party and was expelled for "sectarianism." He then joined the Dortmund newspaper.

He was freed from a Nazi concentration camp at the end of the war.

He had a wife and two daughters.

The Berlin shooting was brought on by the attempt of nine young East Berliners to cross a fence through the barbed wire entanglement. The truck got stuck, and the refugees jumped out and escaped into a part of the American sector that is heavily wooded with this hazel nut trees.

West Berlin police called the shooting the most serious incident since the Communists barricaded the border Aug. 12.

A U. S. ARMY spokesman confirmed there had been shooting. He said a U. S. military police patrol was at the scene but merely observed it.

East German police shouted warnings to the Americans and West Berlin police to stay away from the fence where the refugees' truck was stuck in the wire mesh and then opened fire with rifles and submachineguns, eyewitnesses said.

The East Germans kept shooting sporadically for an hour.

They rushed an armored car to the border with a heavy machinegun mounted on it but it did not fire.

A West Berlin police spokesman at the Zehlendorf Precinct Station in the American sector gave this account:

Shortly before 3 a.m. while it was still dark, a truck manned by the nine refugees — all young men — crashed full speed into the barbed wire fence blocking Mechowitz-Straße, a main connecting Zehlendorf with Klein Machnow, a small town in East Germany on the fringe of Berlin. The truck got caught in the Two jeeps of U. S. military police under command of an officer arrived moments later and were ordered to stay away from the fence.

Dawn was breaking and whenever the military police of the West Berlin police showed themselves the East Germans opened fire.

The shooting lasted until 6 a.m.

Kennedy Spoke Like A Real Southerner

 sounded much like thousands of Southerners and North Carolinians who have uttered the same words from a hundred haunts across the state and South.

He again referred to the South and the Civil War when he said of pre-war days that North Carolina was "firmly fixed in the traditions of the South," sought a way of reason in a "troubled and dangerous world."

"YET WHEN the war came," he said, "North Carolina provided a fourth of all the Confederate soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in those years."

At this point, there was no question that, all other things aside, the President was a popular candidate for the honorary doctor of laws degree which the university bestowed upon him later.

The President also quoted the state's Latin motto at one point, "Euse Quam Veritas." He used this to illustrate his conception of leadership. He said, "What this country needs are those who look, as this state's motto says, of things as they are, rather than as they seem."

The translation of the motto is, "To be rather than to seem."

Gov. Terry Sanford, who was cited for his leadership in education on all levels, also was awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree. With the President were Ambassador in Russia, Llewellyn Thompson, sides, McGeorge Bundy and Henry Wilson, and space boss James Webb.
