Fishful Thought

A Chaser of Mountain Sheep Scoffs at Invasion

Of late Congressional isolationists, always ready to swear by the good old Atlantic and Pacific oceans, have been professing faith in other works of nature. They see an America completely secure from attack because of mountain ranges and a scarcity of railroads. Witness the remarks of one Hamilton Fish in the House of Representatives last Monday:

"Mr. Byeaker, I heard some member in make some remarks to the first some process of the first some remarks to the first some remarks the first some particle flatter by way of stack, the fulled flattes by way of stack, the fulled flattes by way of stack, the fulled flattes by way of the form baker. Now it is through the mountains of Alaska. I want to night have present the first some baker. Now it is through the mountains after in the big mountains about it is a series of the first some flatter mountain sheep in the big mountains if an anemy army should get into Alaska, I do not believe it could make any progress in setting out or coming the first some settings of history and practically no roads."

We do not claim to be military ex-perts like Mr. Fish, who as a Reserve Officer Colonel just concluded a 28-day stay at Fort Bragg for "training."

Neither have we chased mountain sheep across "the big mountains and vast wastes of Alaska" and therefore are not adept at jumping from crag to crag like Colonel Fish.

crag into Colonel Fight.

But we do read the newspapers and are guilbite enough to believe at least part of what we read. (Colonel Fish said if he believed the North Carolina newspapers, he'd look under his bed every night for Nazla.)

night for Nazia.)

Some time ago, for instance, we read that the Germans invaded and conquered a not unmountainous country called Norway. They did so, the papers asid, under the nose of the British Navy, transporting troops across a body of water ten or twenty times as wide as Bering Stratts, Water, mountain, battleships, and a British expeditionary force did not stop the Germans in Norway.

Then, just a few weeks ago, we read how the Germans used air-borne troops to selze the island of Crete. There are also mountains in Crete.

If Colonel Fish's faith in hills is typical of his military accumen, we can at least be thankful that he has completed his present tour of active zervice with the Army. Now, if only something would persuade him to remove himself from

NEW FROBLEMS ARE

COMING UP DAILY

During the coming months there will be increasing interference with circlian production because of the pressure of defense work. The Japanese situation may compel a compiler readjustment in the textile field. Nylon: the symbolic substitute for alle, is in the way to being used exclusively for defense needs.
