It is this assessment about which the UNIW members in District 9 would like to talk to John L. within the next two weeks. If he should fall to accept their invitation or to reasure them as to the straightforward purposes of the assess-ment, they threaten to do what some 22000 UNIW workers over in District 7 have done—to strike against the com-

That is a new form of labor trouble: a strike in protest of union dues and assessments. Likewise it must be a new experience for John L. Lewis.

Chlorine Shortage Explained

A few days ago, Major General William N. Porter, chief of the Army's Chemical Warfare section, made a speech before the American Chemical Gotely. Buried fax down in his address and apparently overlooked by both major press associations was the somewhat dartling assertion that the Army is producing themendous quantities of poison gases. The cat was out of the bag and chemical industry leaders now feel free to discuss what they had previously been warned not even to mention—the real reason for the chlorine shortage.

warned not even to mention—the real reason for the chiotine shortage.

The bottleneck in chlorine itself was no sacret. Paper producers had been told that they would have to do with less jot the yellow-green yas used in bleaching wood pulp. The demand for the possonous stuff is tremendous. In addition to its bleaching function, large quantities of chiorine are consumed in purifying water, producing dry-cleaning Tulda, highleset gasoline, plastice, sairly glass, anti-freeze reducers compounds and many other fertices and non-defense measilies. Quite possibly there would have been fit from kinning the producing and the mander of the chiorine shortage even if the making poison gaz. With the new demand it has become one of the said cost of chemicals. In the new field of conjecture shout what kind of gas the Army is making, many interesting stories are appearing.
